CORONATION PREPARATIONS

PLANNING ACCOMMODATION IN WISCONSIN

April, to be accurate—the work of preparing Westminster Abbey for that great historic event the Coronation of King Edward the Seventh will begin writes "St. James's Gazette." The plans for the adaptation of the interior and exterior of the planners careful consideration has been given to utilizing every inch of floor space from which a view can be had of the ceremony. The practical, we understand, is to erect rows of seats in terrace fashion from the floor almost to the ceiling in both the north and the south transepts. In the nave beyond the choir similar structures will be put up on each side. It is doubtful, however, whether the occupants of throne seats will be able to see very much of the proceedings. They will have a very fine view of the procession as it passes along from the western door to the Royal entrance—up through the nave, but the view of the subsequent ceremony will be more or less obscured by the division that marks off the choir from that large portion of the nave. It has been suggested that this partition might be temporarily removal, and if this were done the ceremony in the main sanctuary would be visible even to those who will be accommodated near the entrance, but as it would necessitate the replacement of some of the showwork the proposal is not likely to receive the approval either of the King or the Dean and Chapter. As much as possible of the north and south aisles will be reserved for the very corner of the sanctuary that will afford even the slightest view will be taken full advantage of.

[illegible]

By the time the workmen have laid down the seats the interior of the Aisle will be almost entirely transformed. The enormous stream, of light, which will be directed into the sanctuary, will be possible to have them, will surely enhance its beauty, but they will at any rate serve their purpose on an historic occasion.

The most characteristic and certainly the most fruitful expression of the national Persian tendency to speculative thought is the faith of the Báb, who laid it down as an axiom that the Creator's revelation of Himself to His creatures through the bestowing of His prophetic mission, is, and ever will be, continuous and progressive. The equality of the millenniums is insisted on, and so also is the advancement of the revelation, that keeps pace with the intellectual development of the world. I would call this Bábism (turning Wilfrid back in "Tongue of Fire") the furthest of the more imaginative of the forces upon the new light of dawn, heralding an era of clearer principles and more active patriotism.

However, paradoxically as in their love of metropolitan civilization, it is in the middle distance of their over-national range that the Persians are unrivalled within the narrow sphere of their surroundings and dislocation. Their Asiatic temperament reveals itself in the gift of enjoying a spontaneous couple in another even more to the point, and in the historic illumination to characterizing and memory. In so much and humour, as well as in vigour and originality of intellect, they stand in the forefront of Eastern people.

The presence of a Parsi presence in the minds of childhooders in their minds which is, after all, nothing more nor less than the result of the influence of their environment. For instance, when the Liberal of Kuchin was told by Curzon that eight days were required to go from London to America (a country in which every Persian is singularly ignorant) is immediately asked if the distance was 80 iroshis, i.e., 520 miles, reckoning from the distance of a day and march in Persia. Fath-'Ali Shah, according to Morier, had been equally conversant with the New World and asked Sir Richard Jones: "What sort of river is "How do you get to it? Is it underground?" In like manner a Persian envoy to London of a century later, being told that the steamer which was carrying him had engines of coal-burner-power, exclaimed ecstatically, "Oh, show me the stains!" This may be supplied by a remark of the Zinc Sultan. One day Ibrahim Mazra and I were chatting together in the flowery courtyard of the Doudoukher when his Highness put us and asked his questions what we were talking about. "An English gentleman, your Highness," replied Bahram. Where men in the Zilla, with an air of testing his own progress in his fishing studies, put a question as to the number of the fish in the sea, and met with the reply, "as many as there are grains of sand on the seashore." "Nonsense!" rapped out the Zilla; "there is not a single fish left, the wangs of the English war-ships, which are set in motion by engines more powerful than 10,000 horses put together, having destroyed them all. Then, turning to me, he said: 'I have today a growing ale. If he neglects his opportunities you must give him the sticks.' Behaim Kim watched his father strutting through the carriage doorway into the harem; then a twinkle came into his eyes. "Que voulez-vous, Sultan?" said he. "When I play at chess with his Highness, I am always obliged to let him win. The sons of a big prince are always in the wrong!"
